Dear Colleagues:

We are pleased to announce that the Luce Asian Archaeology Program is now encouraging applications from qualified junior-level archaeological professionals from East/Southeast Asian Countries for the 2008-2009 academic year. We will offer four (4) full fellowships for the program, which involves 10 months of non-degree coursework at the University of Hawai'i (USA) and subsequent field training beginning in July 2008. All eligibility and application materials are now posted at the bottom of the Program's webpage:

<http://www.anthropology.hawaii.edu/programs/asianarch.html>

We are particularly interested in applicants who:

1. Have the equivalent of a Bachelor's (B.A.) degree from her/his home country;
2. Have two years of professional experience in archaeology or heritage management; and
3. Can demonstrate English language competency at a level sufficient to benefit from college-level courses (TOEFL 500).

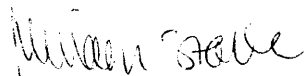

Please refer to this URL for eligibility:

We also welcome applicants who are able to fund their own participation; details concerning this option are also accessible through our web page. If, after viewing the materials, you have additional questions, please contact the Program Coordinator, Dr. Nancy I. Cooper (asiaarch@hawaii.edu).

To facilitate the visa process, we encourage applicants to submit their materials to us in electronic format as soon as possible. We will begin reviewing applications April 4, 2008. This coming year should be an exciting time for the inaugural cohort of participants as it will be for the Program and other archaeologists here at the University of Hawaii at Manoa. We look forward to hearing from our Asian colleagues.

Sincerely yours,

Miriam T. Stark
